Reviewer's Comment for Publication.

(To be published with the manuscript in the journal)

This study examines Indian farmers' awareness of government schemes designed to stabilize the agricultural market and ensure fair pricing mechanisms. It highlights a gap between awareness and participation, pointing to systemic challenges in implementation, outreach, and support. The study's recommendations focus on enhancing scheme efficacy, accessibility, and farmer inclusion. By providing valuable insights, it enriches scholarly discourse and lays a strong foundation for further research in this area.

Detailed Reviewer's Report

Below are my comments:

1. The abstract needs to provide more comprehensive synopsis of the study, including its focus, objectives, theoretical framework, methodology (data collection methods, sampling), and key findings. I suggest the author/s revise the abstract in line with the comment above.
2. The sources used in the study not sufficient enough resulting to the study not having depth and sound theoretical and conceptual background. The author/s should have assembled more relevant literature for better and richer insight and for sound theoretical/conceptual background. Also, some of the sources are over 5 years. This is not very satisfactory for a study of this nature given that there sources available in this area which the author should have drawn a lot of insight from.
3. The methodology section of the study needs major restructuring for clarity. The author/s should state clear and comprehensive methodological orientation of the study. Clearly explain how data in the study was collected and why the choice of data collection method employed in the study. Also the author/s need to explain sampling method used in the study and what criteria informed the choice of the study participants. It will be important as well to highlight any methodological gap in previous studies in this area. Author/s should crosscheck and perhaps restructure this section of the study.
