Detailed Reviewer's Report

This research article, titled “La socialisation des pratiques sportives : les effets du soutien et de l'influence des parents sur la formation du goût sportif des jeunes au sein de l'Université Basketball School (UBS) de Saint-Louis”, presents a well-structured, clear, and methodologically sound analysis of the parental role in shaping the sporting interests of young athletes in Senegal. The study effectively combines a strong theoretical foundation—drawing from family socialization models and the theory of self-determination—with a rigorous quantitative approach using correlation and linear regression analyses. The findings, indicating that parental support ($\beta = 0.489$) exerts a stronger influence than parental modeling ($\beta = 0.422$), are statistically significant and offer valuable insights into the motivational and socialization processes underlying youth sport participation. The writing is coherent, the argumentation logical, and the implications—both theoretical and practical—are meaningful and relevant to educators, parents, and sports development practitioners. Overall, the paper demonstrates academic excellence, originality, and clarity, meriting the editorial decision of “Accepted without revision.”
