Detailed Reviewer's Report

The paper is comprehensive, well-organised, and highly relevant to contemporary discussions on gender justice and prison reform in India. It presents a balanced integration of constitutional analysis, international standards, case law, and lived experiences, effectively linking legal frameworks with ground realities. The objectives are clear, the methodology is appropriate for qualitative legal research, and the literature review demonstrates strong engagement with national and international sources. The analysis of case laws and comparative perspectives adds significant depth and credibility. The findings and recommendations are practical, evidence-based, and aligned with a rights-based, rehabilitative approach. The conclusion effectively synthesises key insights and proposes a realistic path toward reform. Minor improvements could be made in language refinement, reference formatting consistency, and slight tightening of some long sentences for flow and readability. Overall, this is an insightful, academically sound, and policy-relevant study that makes a meaningful contribution to the discourse on gender-responsive correctional justice in India. It is recommended for publication after minor editing for grammar, style, and formatting. Also revise Title of the Paper.
