Detailed Reviewer's Report

1. The paper offers a comprehensive and insightful exploration of how Resolution No. 66-NQ/TW strengthens the legal and institutional framework needed for sustainable national development.
2. A major strength of the paper lies in its systematic analysis of the connection between legal reform and the four strategic breakthroughs.
3. The study demonstrates excellent clarity in explaining the mechanisms through which legislative innovation enhances governance efficiency, transparency, and accountability. This contributes significantly to the discourse on modern public administration and legal modernization.
4. The author effectively integrates theoretical insights with practical policy implications. By analysing the implementation aspect alongside formulation, the paper highlights the importance of both design and execution in achieving meaningful legal reforms.
5. The paper's discussion on institutional capacity-building is particularly compelling, as it acknowledges the need for strong institutions to translate legal frameworks into real-world outcomes. This makes the work highly relevant for researchers and policymakers alike.
