Detailed Reviewer's Report

The paper opens with a comprehensive and well-contextualized discussion of rural women's empowerment, clearly situating the study within global and national debates on gender, digitalization, and community development. The introduction effectively demonstrates the relevance and urgency of the topic by linking structural barriers, patriarchal norms, and the digital divide to the lived realities of rural women, particularly in developing contexts. However, while the background is rich and well-supported by literature, the opening section could be strengthened by being more concise and by more explicitly highlighting the specific research gap, objectives, and contributions of the study earlier, so that readers can more quickly grasp the unique focus and direction of the paper.
